News > As the New Year started, a new occupation began. The School of Slavonic and Eastern European Studies located at 21-22 Russell Square, London which had been vacated some months previous, was occupied by 30 students and non-students, aiming to create free accommodation, denied by speculative property prices and reluctance to be forced into the debt trap produced by the privatisation of education. We seized what has been denied, and we don't seek to re-create private property, but rather, to realise a new radical, public space for all.

Following on from and inspired by previous occupations for use as social centres in London and further a field, our dream is to actively involve not just ourselves but everyone who seeks and is willing to participate in a reformation of space, contesting that space for the development of collective social and political needs.

We open our doors and welcome people to contribute ideas and energy with the time and space we have at SSEES, to make connections with those who are continuously excluded from a privileged life under capitalism – workers, immigrant's, youth; and support, aid and experiment in re-making our world for the benefit of all.
